DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

1. Claims 1-19 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Walker et al (WO 98/10361).

As to Claims 1-19 Walker discloses either explicitly or implicitly as obvious (see at least pages 1-175, but in particular pages 1-10) providing a user with access to an online store through a network, the store having named products with a description of its attributes and features and a price made available to the user, receiving selection requests for selected products, providing the user with access to bid conditions for the selected products or services or entertainment tickets, providing the user with second bid(s) originating from other store(s) participating in a reverse auction who are pre-registered (participating) and agree to provide the second bids for a related product at a checkout time or after placing the bid conditions, with each of the second bids conforming to the bid conditions, which bid conditions are arranged in an order according to one or more of the attributes, with that order based on any of a number of product attributes including price, where one or more of the products has more than one component which can include a product or a service, where one or more of the components is provided from a different other store and the bid is a joint bid between one or more of the other stores, where the product includes a set of one or more of the other products and a service, where the user's personal information is not disclosed to the other stores, and wherein the user's choice of the products offered and the stores offering those alternative products or prices through the user making a choice between them become identified and pre-selected by the user at the time of the purchase transaction.

It would have been obvious to one skilled in the art at the time of the invention to have listed some of the bid conditions from which a buyer could select in addition to those proposed by the buyer, and not only be familiar with Walker's well known invention but also to be able to use it with multiple variations of its many conditions and practices (the patent is 175 pages long, excluding over 85 pages of drawings), which collectively include all of the applicant's claims, because it would be common sense and advantageous.

2. Response to Applicants Argument

The applicant is essentially making only one argument, and that is that the product and store were identified and preselected by the user and that Walker is alleged not to have taught that feature. The alleged specification support for this argument on page 13 does not state that these products and stores were identified and pre-selected by the user except in the sense that they were part of an established network, which network was identified and pre-selected by the user. However that is the same step and feature taught by Walker. In neither case does the user become aware of the identity of all the specific product offerings or stores until after the initial search has been made to identify them. In both cases the user then becomes aware of the product offerings and stores offering them and selects both by the time of purchase. So the argued term in the claim of "identified and pre-selected by the user" is simply a play on words, with no substance to differentiate it from Walker.

3. Note is taken by the examiner that should the applicant find objectionable any statements made herein by the examiner regarding inherency, implicitness, obviousness, or Official Notice, Applicant can make a proper challenge to those statements only by providing adequate information or argument so that on its face it creates a reasonable doubt regarding the circumstances justifying those statements: a simple response requesting a reference without doing so, or a response that fails to logically refute the basic assumptions underlying the justification, will result in an improper and failed challenge and those unchallenged statements will remain the record of the case. Applicants must seasonably challenge those statements in the first response following an Office Action. If an applicant fails to do so, his right to challenge them is waived.
